

Consumer Action’s Directory of Specialty Consumer Reporting Agencies

Specialty consumer reporting agencies collect information about you from various public and private sources. The information gathered is sold through reports to businesses like retailers, insurers, employers, landlords and lenders. Specialty consumer reports are created to verify your identity and to assess the risk that you may pose to companies based on your personal and financial history, which can include your banking and check-writing history, medical conditions and prescription drug claims, residential tenant history, homeownership, auto and personal property insurance claims, utility and mobile phone payments and employment background.

Specialty consumer reports are similar to traditional credit reports (from Experian, Equifax and TransUnion), which contain your credit payment history. But specialty reports are often tailored to a specific purpose, such as insurance claims reports to determine the risk of insuring someone and background reports to gauge employability. Many consumers are unaware that these reports even exist.

In fact, specialty reports do not exist for every consumer. Under certain circumstances, it can be to your advantage to know if a particular specialty report exists on you and what it says. It’s also important to understand your rights and how to correct any errors found in specialty reports, since they do influence whether companies offer you insurance, a job, an apartment, a checking account and more. See Consumer Action’s Insider’s Guide to Specialty Consumer Reports for full details on each report.

Security freeze: In some cases, you can limit others’ access to your specialty consumer report by placing a “security freeze” on your file. A security freeze prevents others from accessing your report without your permission. There is a fee to freeze (or unfreeze) your file in some states.

This directory provides details on:

- How to obtain a free specialty report;
- How to dispute errors; and

- How to place a security freeze on your file at each of the agencies.

Consumer protections

The federal Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) regulates the credit and specialty consumer reporting industry. The FCRA gives you important rights, including the right to:

- Request a free report every 12 months;
- Obtain a free report if you are denied credit, employment or insurance (called an “adverse action”) based on a consumer report; and
- Dispute inaccurate information.

Under the FCRA, you are entitled to a free report if:

- A person has used the information in a report against you (in other words, taken adverse action, such as denying your application for employment, credit, insurance, etc.).
- You are the victim of identity theft and you place a fraud alert in your file.
- Your file contains inaccurate information as a result of fraud.
- You are on public assistance.
- You are unemployed but expect to apply for employment within 60 days.
- The reporting agency has made changes to your report as the result of your dispute.

If you find an error on your specialty report, the FCRA gives you the right to dispute the misinformation. When you dispute information in your reports, agencies are required to investigate and correct inaccuracies.

The dispute process:

Disputing false information you find in reports is an important way to protect yourself from companies that share inaccurate information that may damage your reputation. When you dispute information in your report, the specialty reporting agency is legally obligated to investigate and correct inaccurate or outdated information and provide you with a free updated report when errors are corrected. The dispute process usually takes 30 days. It’s important to also dispute inaccuracies with the source of the errors. For instance, if ChexSystems is reporting that you bounced checks to Home Depot, you should contact ChexSystems and Home Depot to dispute the error(s).

When the investigation of your dispute is complete, the specialty reporting agency must give you the results in writing and a free copy of your report if the dispute results in a change. You also have the right to ask the reporting agency to supply a corrected report to any company that has requested your file in the last six months, and to anyone who received a copy in the past two years for employment purposes. This free report does not count as your free annual report. If an item is changed or deleted, the reporting agency cannot put the disputed information back in your file unless the source of the information (your bank, insurance provider, landlord, etc.) verifies that it is accurate and complete. The reporting agency also must send you written notice that includes the name, address and phone number of the information provider.

If an investigation doesn't resolve your dispute, you can ask the reporting agency to add a brief (100-word) statement to your report. You also can ask the reporting agency to provide your dispute statement to anyone who has recently received (last 6 months) a copy of your specialty report.

More about FCRA regulations can be found online: www.consumer.ftc.gov/sites/default/files/articles/pdf/pdf-0096-fair-credit-reporting-act.pdf.

To file a complaint about a specialty consumer reporting agency, contact the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) at www.consumerfinance.gov/complaint or call 855-411-2372.

Note: The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau is usually the regulatory authority for consumer reporting agencies. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Office for Civil Rights (OCR) shares oversight with the CFPB for the following agencies: MIB, Milliman IntelliScript and MedPoint (OPTUMInsight)
